Digital Disruption

Tuesday 5 April 2016 | 7.30 for 7.45am (sharp)
iInet Conference Centre | Greenhill Enterprise Centre

Digital disruption is happening now in companies large and small, and yet, we are still largely running our organizations the way we always have. Doing the same things repetitively, at scale and with a focus on maximum efficiency. But a shift is underway. In the real-time, mobile-first, cloud-first world, these are no longer the best strategies for success or even survival; agility and flexibility are increasingly important alongside efficiency. This presentation is aiming to engage in a discussion about the changing world and business landscape and how Microsoft is investing in the future to help their customers take advantage of the disruption around them.

Guest Speaker: Matt Furse | Cloud Infrastructure Specialist | Microsoft

Matt Furse has been at Microsoft for 9-years, always having a passion for technology and its potential to have a positive impact on the lives of people the world over. Matt attended the University of the West of England 11-years ago, where he studied Information Systems Analysis with his final dissertation on the topic of the Commoditisation of IT and how it would give rise to what we today call “cloud computing”. Matt has held a broad number of positions at Microsoft ranging from consulting with organisations on their Mobility Strategy, helping to launch Surface in Australia with Business and Government customers and acting as a technology advisor to various large retailers in the UK. Prior to Microsoft, Matt spent 2 years in IBM eBusiness Hosting.
